

DIVERSITY :

can we hold the discomfort?

In the 21st century, we hear about diversity everywhere.

Along with climate emergencies, diversity is the profound challenge of our current times. As social, environmental and political realities continue to shift globally, most human beings on the planet are faced with the question of how willing and able they are to live and work with increasingly diverse groups of people. We're inviting you to consider the following questions:

- What diversity means to you
- What do you hear and feel in this word
- How do you relate to diversity when it appears in your everyday life
- Do you carry ancestry of diversity in your body and personal history
- How do you deal with what it brings up in your life
- How do you keep moving forward with diversity around you
- Does diversity hold opportunities for you to grow and expand your horizons by opening yourself to difference
- Does it mean intractable conflicts and stalled decision-making processes
- Can you use your status/rank to empower yourself and others, or do you feel more victimized in these conversations

Living with diversity can be an exciting challenge, but is it a challenge that we are willing to show up for? We invite you to this forum to hear from a range of invited speakers and to share your perspective and wisdom.
